STEWARDS SUSPEND JOCKEY RADTKE; M'GOVERN AND CORBETT NEAR BLOWS

THIRTY-SIX LOST ON HOUSEBOAT IN A HURRICANE

John Russell, Picked Up by El Paso After Drifting 36 Hours on a Flimsy Raft, Tells Fate of His Comrades.

One of the men who were blown out to sea in a flimsy barge from the Florida coast in the cyclone of last Thursday reached New York today on the steamer El Paso, which picked him up Friday evening. The others were lost, and this survivor saw them die, eight together, at one stage of the storm, one by one at other times, until he was alone on the surface of the sea, clinging to a little raft and surrounded by sharks that waited patiently until he should become too weak to fend off their attacks with a plank.

The El Paso, Capt. Charles Knowles, bound from Galveston to New York, picked him up just when he had concluded it would be well to give up hope. He had been afloat thirty-six hours. The El Paso would probably have passed him by had not Capt. Knowles, apprized of a shipwreck in the vicinity by the debris on the waves, carefully searched the horizon with his glasses and spotted the little raft while it was yet miles away.

The Only Survivor.
John Russell is the name of the survivor of this thrilling disaster. He is a white man, a native of the West Indies and lives with his wife and three children who are mourning him as dead at Salem, Taylor County, Florida. Russell is a bridge and structural iron worker and was at work with hundreds of others building the Finger Railroad across the keys from the mainland of Florida to Key West.

Russell's wardrobe at the present time consists of a pair of trousers and a shirt. His body is a mass of bruises and his hands are so torn he cannot use them. He is a modest man, strong and resourceful and his simple story of his experiences reveals everything told in fiction in the way of adventure at sea. This is his account as given to an Evening World reporter on board the El Paso this afternoon:

By John Russell.
Our gang was working on the railroad on Lower Matecumbe Key, a little island some distance from the mainland. There were thirty-seven of us. We slept on the ground, under a thatched roof. It was a comfortable enough craft for mild weather, but she wasn't built for a voyage at sea in a storm.

The night of Oct. 17 was sultry and disagreeable. There was a strong wind off shore but none of us saw any indications of a big storm. We had our supper as usual at 10 o'clock, and by 10 o'clock were all in bed asleep, leaving only one man on watch.

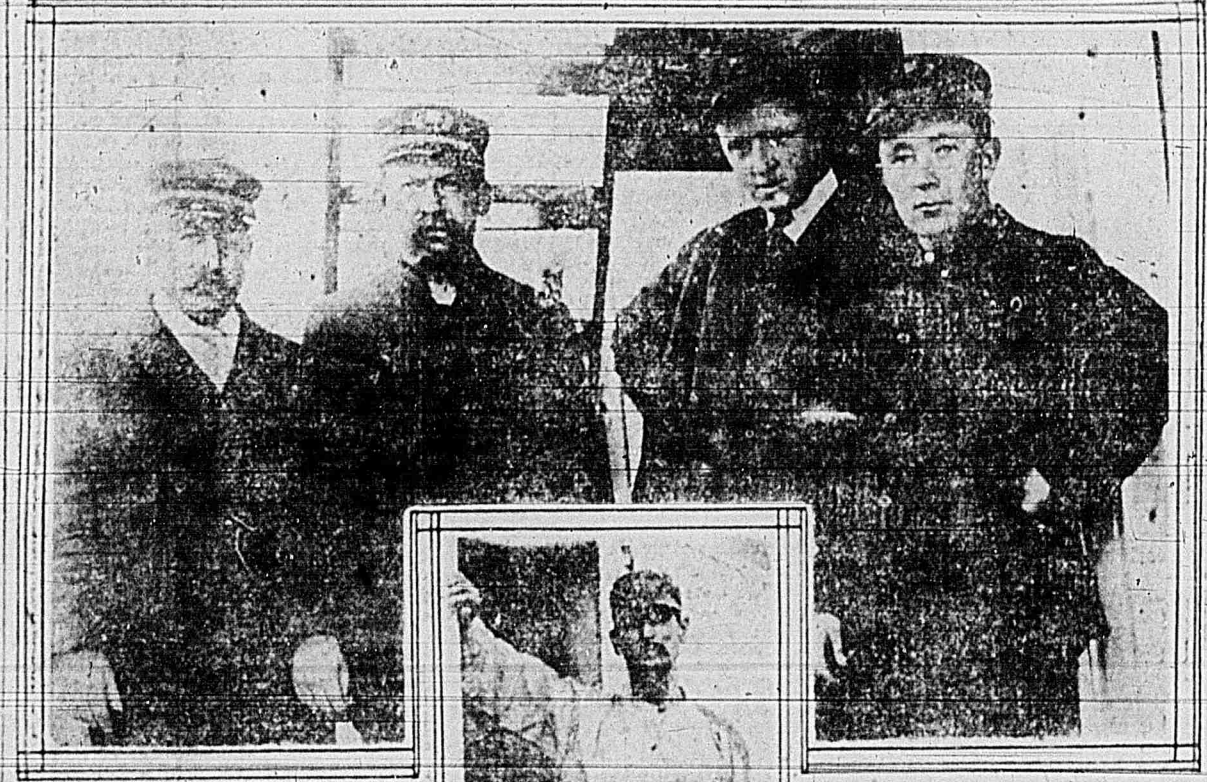

The wind increased in violence, until at midnight it was blowing a gale. A heavy rain fell in the morning and it blew in the windows on the windward side of the boat and let in the rain. We all got up, put on our trousers and shirts and stood by to take care of the boat.

Anchors Couldn't Hold.
We had a 500-pound anchor out. An hour after midnight it began to drag. We put two other 500-pound anchors overboard, but they wouldn't hold, and

FIGHTERS HAVE SCRAPPY ARGUMENT AT METROPOLE.

Meet to Arrange New Match, and Agree, After Hot Words, to Fight Again Before Club Offering the Best Purse, First Week in January.

TERRIBLE TERRY AND CORBETT IN A HOT ARGUMENT.

Terry McGovern and Young Corbett came near settling their differences outside the ring to-day without the formality of articles of agreement, referee, judges, spectators, etc. The near-attack was the result of the meeting arranged at the Metropolitan this afternoon, at which articles of agreement for another fight were to have been signed.

The little madcaps met for the first time since their great fight in front of the Metropole. After a friendly handshake Corbett asked McGovern where he learned to do the goat act. Terry One denied that he had butted Corbett and said: "You know, Billy, that I had something on you in that fight."

They then adjourned to the back room of the Metropole and immediately got busy. Humphries, talking for McGovern, did not want to make any promises. He said that Terry's hand was in such bad shape that he would not be able to fight for at least ten weeks. Pollok wanted him to promise that Terry would fight no one until he had met Terry again.

After the fight the jockey was carried into the room adjoining the jockey's enclosure, where there was a lengthy session.

BY FRANK W. THORP.
JAMAICA RACE TRACK, Oct. 23.—Jockey Radtke was to-day suspended for the balance of the eleven-day meeting here, and his case has been referred to the Jockey Club. Radtke's ride on Tammy Waddell was very bad. The direct cause of the trouble was a throw after the race the jockey was carried into the room adjoining the jockey's enclosure, where there was a lengthy session.

Radtke's riding of late has been generally bad. Rye, a 10 to 1 shot, came back to life in the fourth race and won by a head. George S. Davis was a favorite and won very easily from Oatmeal, a 5 to 1 chance. Rye was out for a while and came back to life in the fourth race and won by a head.

LITTLE TIM FIGHTS AN APPROPRIATION

Little Tim Sullivan made a desperate fight in the Board of Aldermen this afternoon to prevent the appropriation for special deputies to keep the peace at the polls on election day. The question was on the appropriation of $750 to reimburse the Sheriff of Kings County for pay of deputies appointed to keep order at the primary elections.

OPPOSES PAYMENT OF DEPUTY SHERIFFS FOR WORK ON PRIMARY ELECTION DAY.
Alderman Sullivan took the stand that the order of the Governor to Sheriff Flaherty to use special deputies to keep order at the polls was an interference with the right of the people to elect their representatives.
